

Building A Parallel Society

Founder and CEO Andrew Torba of Gab.com recently said, We must do everything we can right now to peacefully protect our freedom by building a parallel society.

It's baffling to me how people do not recognize the urgency of the situation we are in. We have lost so much over the past 18 months and we will never get it back unless we start taking a stand right this second.

That means putting in the work. You may need to find a new job. You may need to move. It may involve pulling your children out of school. You may need to find a new doctor, a new church, maybe a new everything. You may even have to show up at your local city council and school board meetings to let them have a piece of your mind.

What does a parallel society look like?

Perhaps some of the following...

- Homeschooling your kids
- Turning off the television, at least mainstream news propaganda

- Deleting your Facebook account, find alternatives (like Gab.com for example)
- Moving to a better area near people who share your values
- Getting involved in local instead of national politics
- Avoiding the 'woke' crowd
- Supporting businesses who support your values
- Consuming content from people who share your values
- Radically removing each and every last corrosive system of control and fear from your life

It won't be easy, nothing worthwhile is. But it can, and is being done by so many people in your exact position.

Let me ask you something: what is your freedom worth to you?

To me it is worth everything.

It's not just Andrew Torba , but I have been thinking about this for awhile. The way things are going, there will increasingly be a parallel society. It is a very unfortunate, and even dangerous place we're in. However, it is thrust upon us.

I write this NOT to get down in the gutter of national and global politics, because there's no upside to bitching and moaning about it. Most everyone reading this knows exactly what's going on here...and that there's little to nothing we can do about it, with the exception of LOCAL involvement.

So, instead, it is becoming more evident that we're headed to a pretty stark division of 'life', lifestyle. Two parallel societies, each outcasts of the other.

One is headed straight to transhumanism, presently in the process of assimilation. You might say, Cyborg. Ultimately becoming cybernetic transhuman organisms through genome modification and technological implantation. The Borg, linked in a hive mind, monitored and strictly controlled within The Global Collective...

The other society, 'natural' human life.

Leaving The Existing System

In the context of what's happening right now (the vax), I agree with the opinion of Torba who says,

All of the best, most talented, and smartest people are critical thinkers. They are builders. Doers. They are quickly leaving the existing system. What will be left is low quality talent. The “yes” men people who will shut up, do what they are told, and get their 15th booster shot to keep their job.

The existing system will begin to collapse under a sea of “vaccinated” talent shortages, incompetence, and woke political nonsense.

Hospitals won't (and already can't) find much needed nursing talent. Schools won't be able to find teachers. Businesses who are already having trouble filling open positions will be forced to compete with businesses who don't pry into your healthcare privacy. You can't just cut off 80 million people and not expect your business and country to suffer.

The society of obedient regime sheep will chug along for a while, but inevitably it will succumb under the weight of market forces from a growing new parallel society.

Companies without mandates will perform better and get all of the best talent. Doctors will start private practices. Families will begin to homeschool their children. Blue states and major cities will see a mass exodus unlike anything in American history.

All we have to do is say no and start building a new society for ourselves. We need to take control of our own destiny here and do what needs to be done to protect our families and preserve our values and indeed our own humanity.

In a lot of ways we are the modern Pilgrims of our time, seeking religious freedom and sovereignty to escape the rule of a tyrannical elite who hate us.

Lets Help Build Our Own Parallel Society

In summary, lets help build our own parallel society. Wherever you can, EXIT the system on the other side. They don't want us there anyway. We have already started building. It is very exciting. Building infrastructure. These are POSITVIE, CONSTRUCTIVE, ACTIONS.

I no longer (to the extent possible) dwell on my angry emotions to do with national/global tyranny. Instead, it's all about LOCAL. My life. Our life here at home. That with our neighbors, friends. The mainstream can go 'shove it'.

Because when you shut it out, you discover that life is pretty good! The bad stuff they try and shove down our throat is so exaggerated that it does not resemble reality. And I'll bet you will discover the same thing...

So, stay positive. Look for opportunities that will help you exit their system, while focusing on opportunities to build our own. Right now there is no need to fight them, although I believe they want a fight. Instead, just leave them behind as they whine and scream like spoiled little demanding children.

We will win.
